

COUNTRY MINUS A SINGLE HERO

Carnegie Commission Examines 27 Claims And Rejects Them All.

EXTRAORDINARY BRAVERY MINUS

Rescues By Would-Be Wearers Of Medals Are Declared To Be Of A Commonplace Nature.

[Special by Scripps-McRae.]

Pittsburg, Jan. 18.—There is not a real hero or heroine in the United States. The Carnegie hero fund commission decided this Wednesday. Though twenty-seven claims for medals were urged, not one was awarded.

Several who assisted in saving persons whose lives were imperiled in the General Slocum disaster eighteen months ago, in which 1,000 persons were burned or drowned, thought they were heroes and their claims were advanced before the commission. The commission looked them over and decided they did nothing heroic. "They must depend upon the gratitude of the persons whose lives they saved for their reward, and as most of the passengers on the ill-fated boat were poor it is not likely that the rescuers will get any gold or silver medals."

No Heroism on Lake.

In addition to this, the cases of Captain D. S. McDonald of North-East, Pa., and six of his crew on the steamer Severnia, bound for Cleveland, which went down off Sand Island Reef in Lake Superior Sept. 2, 1905, also were rejected. "It had been stated in the newspapers that Captain McDonald and six of his crew decided to stand by in the face of sure death to see that all others were saved."

The Carnegie hero fund commission reports adversely on this. The statement is made that Captain McDonald, who, according to the newspaper world, died a hero, as did his six men, really did nothing heroic. They were "caught in the forepart" of the ship by its breaking, and had no chance to escape.

The commission ordered an immediate investigation of the cases of Capt. Mark Castro and his crew of the smack Albertus, who went to the rescue of the steamer Cherokee near Atlantic City some days ago.

Cash Fund for Girl.

The only popular move made by the commission was the granting of $2,500 to Miss Maude Titus of Newark, N. J., who, at a previous meeting of the commission, had been granted a silver medal for life-saving. Miss Titus is the 16-year-old daughter of the late Dr. William Titus of Newark. She was granted a medal Oct. 10, and twelve days later her father died, leaving the family in but moderate circumstances.

Laura Reifsnnyder of East Orange, N. J., whose life Maude Titus had saved, went personally before the commission and pleaded for the girl, asking that she be sent through school. This was decided on. Miss Titus gets $500 the day she graduates from the Newark high school and $500 per year for four years while she is in college.

Story of Heroism.

The case of Miss Titus is considered one of the most interesting ever brought under notice of the commission. On July 30, 1904, with Miss Reifsnnyder and some others, she was aboard the yacht Romance, owned by Mr. Burgess of Boston in Casco bay at Yarmouth, Me. The yacht foundered and Miss Reifsnnyder could not swim, but Maude Titus stuck with her, and though strong swimmers forced their way to land, she went down with her, and after a long time, finally dragging her to shore.

The commission has now refused 27 applications, granted nineteen and has 360 yet to consider.

Almost a month of the New Year has slipped by, and as far as we are able to observe, things seem about like they were last year.

TILLMAN FLAYS THE PRESIDENT

Pitchfork Senator From South Carolina Makes Bitter Attack On Roosevelt.

HIS RESOLUTION LAID ON TABLE

Senate By Vote Of 54 To 8, Refuses To Appoint Committee To Investigate The Mrs. Morris Episode.

[Special by Scripps-McRae.]

Washington, D. C., Jan. 18.—Tillman this morning presented a resolution to the senate providing for a committee to investigate the recent expulsion of Mrs. Minor Morris from the White House. By a vote of 54 to 8 the resolution was tabled.

Blunt, Brutal Onslaught

Washington, Jan. 18.—Senator Tillman of South Carolina stirred congress to its depths Wednesday afternoon by a bitter attack on President Roosevelt. The dignified senate has not experienced a sensation of the same character since the late John J. Ingalls made his historic onslaught on President Cleveland nearly twenty years ago, but for a parallel the history-seeker must go back of the Ingalls episode, if one be found at all.

The "Vindicator" Kansan, with his matchless eloquence and almost classic invective, dealt with a democratic president in his relations to the legislative branch of the government. His rounded periods of sarcasm stung like a whip, but it was oratory refined in comparison to a later-day democrat's denunciation of a republican executive. Tillman's philippic went beyond criticism of the president as president and assailed Theodore Roosevelt, the man. It was blunt, personal, brutal.

Senate Listens in Silence.

All the emotion embodied in the fierce South Carolinian, who in the hustings previous to his entry into congress gained the sobriquet of "Pitchfork," was poured upon the ears of a dumfounded senate and crowded galleries, and finally upon a big portion of the members of the house, who

It was the setting that gave dramatic interest to the attack. The things Tillman said—many of them—were not new, but they never before had been expressed by the enemies of the President outside of back rooms, public bars, on the street corners and, infrequently, in partisan newspapers. Wednesday this personal denunciation was brought to the floor of the senate of the United States, and the elastic rules—or, rather, lack of rules, as far as speech is concerned—permitted the senate to do nothing except listen.

The senators sat glued to their seats until "finally," when Tillman had dragged in the Mrs. Minor Morris affair of several days ago, and dwelt with insinuating emphasis upon President Roosevelt as a "gentleman," Senator Hale of Maine arose to protest.

The Hale interruption made a worse mess of things than all-round silence would have done. It put Tillman in a corner where he was forced to declare he would offer a resolution for a senatorial investigation of the forcible ejection of Mrs. Morris from the White House and forced Mr. Hale to declare he would not oppose the resolution.

But other senators will oppose it. Tillman will not have the entire support of his democratic colleagues, although promising to submit proof of his charges that "lies have come from the White House" in explanation of the outrage. Senator Daniel of Virginia, deprecated the announced purpose of Tillman, and hoped he would consult his colleagues before acting.

VAN HISE REJECTS THE PETITION OF STUDENTS

Faculty Is Prescribing The Anti-Football Policy—Collegians Must Take The Medicine.

[SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.]

Madison, Wis., Jan. 18.—Fifteen hundred students of the University of Wisconsin have subscribed to a petition praying of President Van Hise and the faculty that the action of the faculty in standing for a suspension of intercollegiate football be rescinded, and that a policy of reformation of the game be adopted. The petition has been negatively passed upon by President Van Hise. He gives two reasons for refusing to grant a hearing to representatives of the students. One is that there is not time before the intercollegiate football conference in Chicago to hear the students, and the other reason is that the matter is one for the faculty and not the students to determine. "If you gentlemen were on trial," said President Van Hise to the petitioners, "we should certainly grant the desired hearing, but it is purely a matter of university discipline and government, a matter for the faculty to determine, and not for the students to dictate or advise."

The approval given the faculty action by the regents this week has shown that the governing board of the university, coming from various sections of the state, is in favor of restraining the great college game, by stopping it for two years and reforming it before resumption.

Former Senator W. F. Chandler of Massachusetts offered a resolution calling for the permanent organization of the committee, and it was adopted. [SPECIAL BY SCRIPPS-McRAE.]

Chicago, Jan. 18.—Marshall Field's remains arrived on the special train from New York this morning. The train stopped at 31st street and the casket was taken to the home.

Chicago, Jan. 18.—The funeral of Marshall Field, which will be held at the family residence, 1905 Prairie avenue, at noon to-morrow, will be marked by its simplicity.

But while the simple rites are being observed at the home Chicago and the commercial world of the middle west will pay an unprecedented tribute to the dead man. During the hour of the funeral stores, banks, shops, schools, and many other busy places will be still. Thousands will cease from their labors and pay a silent tribute of respect.

The thousands of Mr. Field's employees in the city will bring the day of public mourning to a close with a memorial service in the Auditorium at 4:30 o'clock. Several ministers, who will be selected by the committee to-morrow, will give ten minute talks; and a special musical program will be rendered.

Tentative plans for the services at the residence were outlined by Chicago relatives and business associates of Mr. Field yesterday. They will be held in abeyance, however, until the arrival of the immediate members of the family from New York to-day. The plans will then be submitted to the widow for her approval before being officially announced.

= FORTY YEARS AGO =

Jansville Daily Gazette, Thursday, January 18, 1896.—The Lecture Last Evening—A large and intelligent audience greeted the Hon. Geo. Thompson last evening at Lapham's Hall, who opened the course of lectures to be delivered this winter under the Young Men's Association. Mr. T. is a man of apparently sixty-five years of age, and is in remarkably good state of preservation, and when thoroughly aroused is as full of fire and vigor as he was twenty years ago. He has none of the rosy beard and plump cheeks of the rosy-faced, middle-aged man, but is a tall, spare, intellectual-looking gentleman, whose appearance would lead one to believe him to be a half-past Professor in some poor, endowed College, or a New England clergyman, who dwells longer upon the divine decrees in the study, than upon dumplings at the dinner table. His lecture last night was not upon the signs of the times, as advertised, but was a review of the origin, the history and the overthrow of American Slavery, and in handling which he committed the blunder, which was perhaps unavoidable, of recapitulating much of the current history of the country for the past twenty years, and with which the most ignorant in the audience were already familiar. That was one of the defects of his lecture. Another was the egotistical reference, which the speaker made to himself, and to the important services which he had rendered to the cause of human liberty. Excepting these two particulars, the lecture was most admirable and satisfactory, and in every way worthy of the great reputation of the distinguished speaker. He is a perfect master of the art of putting things, and his production as a literary effort was of very high order. Those present who are in the habit of writing for the public eye, or addressing popular audiences, must have admired the charming manner in which his vigorous sentences were turned and polished.

At the close of the lecture, Mr. Patterson, in a few well-timed remarks, moved that the thanks of the audience be tendered to the eloquent foreigner not only for his lecture but for his friendly labors among his countrymen in our behalf during the war—which was carried unanimously, and clinched by three cheers suggested by Hon. James Sutherland. The next lecture in the course is to be delivered by Ralph Waldo Emerson, who is regarded by the learned men of Europe as the most original product of our intellectual life.

Fat Man's Hard Luck—Declares One Who Knows. Harry Connor.

Why is it nobody loves a fat man? Fat men have all kinds of hard luck. They're always doing the wrong thing and getting blamed for it.

There's Wm. H. Taft. He's very unpopular. There's Mayor Tom. Nobody likes him at all. And there's Harry Connor.

Theatergoers with long memories will recall Connor in the Fort Kears years ago when they were the rage. He used to play the leading roles in "A Trip to Chinatown," "A Texas Steer," "A Stranger in New York," et cetera, ad infinitum. His "bawdy" song was warbled from here to the Annapolis.

Just now Connor is a butler. He is butting in "Mrs. Temple's Telegram," a comedy which is funnier than Hoyt's over thought of being.

Mr. Connor recently returned from England, where he toured in Hoyt's farces. The venture prospered and every week the scales told Connor he had put on flesh. He came back looking like a regular round man. He was complaining about it lately and said:

"They do it so much better in England, really, really," he said. "Over there they use the kangaroo walk—a sort of Grecian bend. You can imagine what a comfort that kangaroo walk is to a man with a 'bow window' which takes a 72-inch vest. You sort of hunch your shoulders over and amble gracefully along and your vest is modestly concealed."

"But here in America it's different."

A big fat man seems proud of the contour of his figure, and he walks along with his shoulders back and lets the whole world see his vest. It's tough.

"And then there's my face. Look at these jaws. I've got to hold my head up in the air like a dog gazing at a cat on an artifice window. If I don't my cheeks and neck get together and hang over my collar. I look like the full moon."

"I used to walk up and down the avenue after the matinee and give the ladies a treat. 'But I don't do it any more because they laugh at me. I'm a full moon. I am; nothing but a full moon. Let's have a drink.'"

Mr. Connor will be seen at the Meyers' Grand tonight in "Mrs. Temple's Telegram."

"PIFFI PAFFI POUFFI" FINE
Whitney's Show Ticked Big House At The St. Clair.

"Piffi Pauffi Pouffi" can come back. The Whitney way wins in musical comedy. The Whitney "Isle of Spice" made good here last year, came back and scored again. Same to "Piffi Pauffi Pouffi."

B. G. Whitney production pleased a good sized house at the St. Clair theatre Thanksgiving evening. It was a good long show, and it wasn't a minute too long. There were certainly catchy songs, and the crowd liked them and their singers too. The "Pony Ballet" made a hit and Fred Macs and Kathryn Osterman made good "higher up."

It was almost all to the good. From Greenburg, Pa.

BRIEF NEWS FROM OLD ROCK.

"HEN PARTY" FOR ROCK RIVER MAN WHO KILLED BIG HEN HAWK RECENTLY

Rock River, Jan. 17.—George Richel is having his share of surprise parties lately. Two weeks ago he was treated to a "hen-hawk" party and last Thursday a "hen party" swooped down on him, consisting of about twenty of the young people and captured him completely. He revived, however, and a very pleasant time was spent. Light refreshments consisted of popcorn, fudge, coconut and peanut candy, were served by the young ladies. His flock of hens was increased by ten for which he is very grateful.

Mr. and Mrs. Lona Green visited relatives at Stoughton from Friday until Sunday.

DRINK
BARS MEN FROM BUSINESS

We read of the business man who falls from prosperity to ruin, loses his family and friends and the only ambition left is to be admitted to the "poor house." Drink is given as the cause of his condition.

Drink has conquered the strongest intellects, the bravest hearts and the noblest natures. Business competition has become so keen that only men of steadfast habits can expect to succeed. No will power on earth can stand the inflamed stomach membranes burned out by alcohol. The craving for drink is a disease brought on by continual indulgence in alcoholic stimulants and requires treatment.

Take Courage!

If you are naturally not as strong as your more fortunate sisters, and for this reason experience dread rather than joy at the prospect of becoming a mother, take courage and assurance from this fact: Mother's Friend is meant for you, and by its use you may pass through that glorious martyrdom which is yours by divine right with no more discomfort than that experienced by those who by nature are possibly more adapted for the role of motherhood.

is a liniment of proven merit, and its great worth can be no better attested to than by the countless strong and healthy children who through its kindly offices have entered this world unhandicapped by any deformity or weakness. It is a liniment which by external application acts upon the abdominal muscles and permits of a painless parturition.

Store-management is something of a "black art," for printer's ink is usually "store-man-agement"—only store-keeping.

The packers trial has begun in Chicago with more delays.

Governor Davidson has taken to discharging public employees who are merely drawing pay for the sake of greasing the machine.

Mr. Babcock may have lost his fight against the Philippine tariff measure but he has made friends in the farmer districts of this and other states.

Our esteemed board of county supervisors finds that affairs have not been run according to Hoyle in the past, and after the horse is stolen are prepared to lock the stable door to keep the cow from straying away.

It would appear, as though former County Clerk Starr would have to pay back that money so kindly appropriated him some years ago by a considerate county board if a certain supervisor keeps his word.

In another column of the paper will be found an extract from the Milwaukee Daily News with matter relative to the first congressional district. It is interesting to note how disturbed Mr. Jeffris' candidacy makes some people.

The Beloit Daily News copies any slurring remark that may be published about the Gazette with great glee. Thanks for the free advertising you are giving the paper. Keep on copying other editor's editorial as you do their news matter and your paper will be readable.

It would appear as though Mr. Lenroot may need that three thousand dollars he obtained out of the state treasury before he finishes paying the expenses of the Mary Ann League fiasco. This wonderful troupe is now playing one-night stands to poor houses.

A careful perusal of the vote of the Wisconsin congressmen on the Philippine tariff measure show that Mr. Cooper was the only one to vote for the measure. Then it should be considered that probably more tobacco and sugar-beets are grown in his district than in any other in the state.

Mr. Smith thinks he has a grievance against the Gazette because it said things about his methods of spending the county's money. Poor Mr. Smith is not half so big a man outside of Beloit as he is on his native soil. It is not less majestic to discuss the handling of the finances of the people's money even if Mr. Smith did expend it.

In another column will be found a denial from Judge Becker of Monroe that he ever said Judge Sale and Judge Dumwiddle were aristocrats. The Gazette copied his statement from the Monroe Sentinel and supposed it to be correct. When it was printed it was really considered a joke as neither gentlemen referred to have ever shown any such tendencies at home.

CARNATION DAY.

January 29 is the sixty-third anniversary of the birth of William McKinley, and will be the fourth annual observance of "Carnation day." The Carnation League of America, instituted as an annual memorial of the late president and dedicated to national patriotism, has established the custom of displaying President McKinley's favorite flower on that day.

To wear a carnation in the lapel of the coat, or in the hair or at the throat on each recurring January 29 in silent memory of a departed public servant is what is contemplated by this movement.

TRANSPORTATION ROUTES.

"The transportation Routes and Systems of the World" is the title of a monograph just issued by the Department of Commerce and Labor through its Bureau of Statistics. It includes, in addition to statistical statements showing the development of transportation facilities on land and sea, a map by which is presented a bird's-eye view of the world's principal railway and steamship routes and the auxiliary relationship which one bears to the other.

Many maps showing vessel routes on the ocean have been published, also many maps showing the railways of the principal countries; but few if any attempts have been made to systems of the entire world. The map, in conjunction with its accompanying tables, presents in outline a combination of the information regarding land and water routes usually found only in separate form in other publications. It does not enter upon any elaborate discussion of transportation routes, methods, or systems, but simply outlines in condensed form a few of the great highways of commerce by land and sea in combination. This seems especially appropriate at this time when the land and water transportation systems of the world are offering facilities by which the producer or merchant in the interior of the continent may ship his merchandise from his own door to that of the consignee in the far interior of another continent, upon a through bill of lading, and therefore with a knowledge of the cost of transportation from his own establishment to that of the consignee and an assurance that the through freight freights shipped in this manner will pass promptly from the land vehicle to that of the ocean, and again from that of the ocean to that of the land.

The development of the systems of transportation which now place the producer in the interior of one continent in direct communication with the consumer in the interior of another continent is a product of a comparatively few years. Within the lifetime of men and women now living the world had not a single mile of railway, or a single steamship crossing the ocean. Today the world has on land 55,000 miles of railway, and on the ocean 6 million net tons of sail-carrying power and 18 million net tons of steam-carrying power. At the beginning of the last century the sail-carrying power aggregated 4 million tons; steam-carrying power on the ocean did not exist, nor did railways on land exist. By the middle of the century sail-carrying power on the ocean was more than 11 million tons, the steam-carrying power on the ocean was less than 1 million tons, and the railways on land were but 24,000 miles. By 1880 sail power on the ocean had reached 14 1/2 million tons, steam power about 6 million tons, and railways on land 225,000 miles. From that time forward steam power on the ocean so rapidly took the place of the sail that in 1905 sailing vessels on the ocean aggregated but 6 million tons carrying power, while steam vessels had an aggregate tonnage of 18 1/2 million tons and railways an aggregate of 550,000 miles in length, of which 217,000 miles, or two-fifths of the total, are in the United States.

The development of railways has been, up to the present time, chiefly centered in the temperate zone, particularly Europe and the United States, Mexico, and Canada in America, though Japan in the Orient and India in the tropics are now fairly well supplied with facilities for land transportation. The great trans-continental line between Europe and the far east, while Australia's railways are confined chiefly to a line slanting the southern and eastern coasts and a half-dozen short lines tapping the interior. In Africa the British colonies at the south are fairly well equipped with railways, while the proposed Cape to Cairo trans-continental line is making substantial progress from Cairo, its terminus at the north, and Cape Town, its southern terminus, considerably more than one-half of the road being now completed and in operation. South America is still without any great railway system, her facilities being confined chiefly to eastern Brazil, northern Argentina, Chile, Paraguay, and Uruguay.

The United States leads the world both in the present mileage and the recent growth of its railways. Of the total railway mileage of the world, aggregating 554,000 miles for 1904, 211,074 miles were in the United States, 35,323 miles in European Russia, 32,967 miles in Germany, 28,163 miles in France, 26,950 miles in India, 24,120 miles in Austria-Hungary, 22,614 miles in the United Kingdom, 19,611 miles in Canada, 15,560 miles in Africa, 11,113 miles in Australia, 11,559 miles in Argentina, 10,356 miles in Mexico, 9,961 miles in Italy, 9,368 miles in Brazil, 7,697 miles in Sweden, 7,322 miles in Siberia, Manchuria, and other Asiatic possessions of Russia, 4,495 miles in Japan, and 1,176 miles in China. It was not until 1835 that the number of railways in operation in the United States first reached as much as 1,000 miles, being in that year 1,098 miles; by 1850 the total had grown to 9,021 miles; by 1860 to 30,026 miles; in 1865, 35,085 miles. In the decade from 1865 to 1875 the mileage more than doubled, the total for the last year named being 74,096; the total for 1885 was 128,320 miles; for 1895 181,115 miles; for 1900 242,262 miles, and for 1905 217,325 miles, their aggregate cost being estimated by Poor's Manual for 1905 at the enormous sum of 11 and two-thirds billions of dollars; out of an aggregate cost of $7 billions for the entire world.

The total net tonnage of the steam and sailing vessels of the world, including only vessels of over 100 tons each, is stated by Lloyd's Register at about 6 million tons of sail and 18 1/2 million tons of steam. Of this total of 24 1/2 million tons, 11 million tons, or nearly one-half, is credited to the United Kingdom and her colonies, 2 1/2 millions to the United States, 1 and one-third millions to France, and about one-half million tons each to Russia, Sweden, Spain, Japan, and the Netherlands, in the order named.

In sharp contrast with the rapid growth achieved by American railways is the slow development of the merchant marine of the United States. The tonnage of its vessels, estimated in 1905, was 1,515,508 tons; in 1895, 822,247 tons; and in 1905, 943,750 tons. The tonnage of vessels engaged in the coastwise trade of the United States was 2,542,255 tons in 1895, 3,219,698 tons in 1875, 3,728,714 tons in 1895, and 5,411,688 tons in 1905; while the total tonnage of the merchant marine of the United States, including all vessels whether engaged in the foreign trade, the coastwise trade, or the whale, cod, and mackerel fisheries, has only grown from 5,212,001 tons in 1855 to 6,450,543 tons in 1905.

Freight rates are shown to have decreased both on land and sea. The average rate per bushel of wheat from Chicago to New York has decreased as follows: By lake and canal, from 26.6 cents in 1865 to 4.7 cents in 1905; by lake and rail, from 29 cents in 1865, the earliest available date, to 5 cents in 1905; by railway only, from 46 cents in 1866 to 11 cents in 1905. For the same commodity the rate between New York and Liverpool, while subject to wide fluctuations, has shown a general decline especially in more recent years. In 1873 the rate per bushel of wheat from New York to Liverpool was 10 and nine-sixteenths cents; in 1875, 8 and seven-sixteenths cents; in 1885, 3 and three-sixteenths cents; in 1895, 2 and nine-sixteenths cents; and in 1905, 1 1/4 cents.

During the latest year for which statistics are available, the railways of the United States carried 719,654,951 passengers, and transported 1,300 million tons of freight, against 337,427,688 passengers carried, and 437 million tons of freight transported in 1895.

The close connection between adequate transportation facilities and commerce is illustrated by the fact that in 1800, when there were no railroads or steamships and but 4 million tons of sail-carrying power on sea, the world's commerce was but 1 1/2 billions of dollars, while at the present time, aided by nearly 550,000 miles of railway and the ocean steam and sail tonnage above described, its international commerce approximates 22 1/2 billions of dollars. Thus, under the newly created transportation systems of the last century, which have developed the interior of continents and made merchantable many commodities which formerly would not bear the cost of transportation, the international commerce of the world is today about fifteen times as much as at the beginning of the last century, while the world's population is but two and one-half times as much as at that time, the commerce of the world's population, as a whole, having thus grown from less than $250 per capita in 1800 to nearly $14 per capita at the present time.

PRESS COMMENT.

Marshall Field's Disposition. Chicago Tribune: Marshall Field was not the richest man in the United States—he was merely the heaviest taxpayer.

He Was Forewarned.

Milwaukee News: At least, if Governor Davidson rams his gubernatorial chances, he can not complain that there were no pilots to be taken aboard.

Drew Out An Opinion.

Oshkosh Northwestern: Representative Babcock seems at least to have managed to draw a very outspoken expression of opinion from Speaker Cannon as to the former's loyalty to the present republican administration.

Hardly Worth Saving.

Racine Journal: Witte says that he is determined to save Russia. Well, we have no objections, but the present methods in vogue are liable to result in saving what is really a wreck, with but little salvage.

Even Chills Are Preferable.

Superior Telegram: The Chicago Inter Ocean says: "The black hand is raised against society in Chicago. And only the strong hand of an angry and united people can successfully contend against it." That makes us glad we are living in Superior.

Now It's The Black Potato.

Milwaukee Sentinel: A black potato is said to be making a sensation as the latest novelty in vegetables, report having it that the eccentric tuber is of excellent flavor, and is especially recommended for ornamental cookery and salads. Coming from the banks of the Congo, its color should occasion no great surprise.

North Shore "Ozone."

Silver Joe Konkert in Superior Clarion-Ledger: Lyman J. Gage, you are a fool. You are a condemned old monkey. And so are all the others who are predicting a panic at this time. We are now in an era of rising prices, and from the very nature of things, this must go on for years to come, or until there is a falling off in the production of gold. Gage, you give me a pain. Seat! Get out! Vamoosa. We want none of your calamity howling and none of your dismal wailings.

Fond du Lac Likes Him.

Fond du Lac Bulletin: Senator Ernest Morton of Waukesha, one of the best known democrats of Wisconsin, has announced himself as a candidate before the primary for the nomination for governor. The announcement will be received with much pleasure throughout the state; for no man in Wisconsin is better known or more highly esteemed. He has, by years of faithful work, proved himself a loyal democrat, and when ever put to test, has been on the side of the people.

To Just Be The Governor.

Whitewater Register: Governor Davidson has the opportunity to make himself one of the most popular men in the state. All he has to do is just to attend to the duties of his office as prescribed by the constitution and the laws and the trick is turned. There is enough legitimate business month and year and no time to play politics or organize a personal machine if he does his duty. And if he does his duty he will need no machine; the public will take care of his interests.

Morton A Good Choice.

Green Bay Gazette: Senator Ernest Morton of Waukesha as the democratic candidate for governor would undoubtedly arouse more enthusiasm among the voters of that party than any candidate Wisconsin democracy has presented for several years. He represents the political ideas of nine-tenths of the members of his party. Another point in his favor is that he has taken an active part in legislative action during late years. He is not a "dead one," politically and the younger democrats of the state have been looking for live leaders, men in touch with current political events.

"Making War" On The President.

Chicago Chronicle: We are as far as possible from wishing any sort of harm to President Roosevelt or to the republican fifty-ninth congress, but we must be excused from shedding any tears over the reports from Washington that both houses of congress are in a state of open war against the president. On general principles this is a healthy symptom. The greatest danger that confronts republican institutions in this country is the tendency of the executive and legislative branches of government to coalesce. If they do not form a ring for the purpose of plundering the public the executive branch, by means of the appointing power, subjugates the legislative branch to its will. In either case there is only one branch instead of two and all checks and balances in administration are destroyed. A shallow mind might accept it as a harbinger of the millennium when there is perfect and loving accord between the president and congress and between the mayor of a city and the city council, but it is just the reverse.

The Suppression Of Poker.

Exchange: We are again in the throes of controversy—and angry controversy at that—over the question, "Is poker a gambling game?" Some think it is; others are quite positive it is not; many are of the opinion that if it is not it ought to be, while fully as large a number refuse to view it in any other light than that of a national institution and one that should, within certain limitations, be fostered and protected and preserved.

In point of age, poker, as it is understood and practiced by some of our very best people, takes precedence of the national constitution. Not only was it in vogue before the Boston tea party, but it is a recreation that will ever appeal to our higher and nobler sentiments by reason of the fact that it assisted materially in holding together the shattered Confederates during that terrible winter at Valley Forge.

Tradition says that Washington always felt hopeful and secure as long as the know that his men were keeping up their interest in poker, and that one of the few pleasures that were his in those trying days was to stroll through the camp at night and observe from a distance, and by the light of the camp fire, a group of his tattered soldiers surrounding a jack pot of New Jersey potatoes.

A Rose For The Desert.

Chicago Inter Ocean: There is a widespread and growing belief that one of the objects of the new promoters of the movement looking to the admission of Arizona as a separate state is to provide the Hon. David Rose, mayor of Milwaukee, with a constituency which will be able to place him in the United States senate.

It goes without saying that this object is a worthy one and one that must appear forcibly to everyone who has served Milwaukee for many years, in a public and prominent capacity, without having to answer to an indictment containing anywhere from eleven to thirty-five counts, should be suitably and conspicuously rewarded.

Certain surface indications give strength to this belief. It appears to be taken for granted that if Arizona is only afforded the opportunity she will unhesitatingly choose the Hon. David Rose, and it is no trivial indication of the trend of events that the Hon. David Rose is at the present time, or has recently been, in Arizona.

There is, perhaps, no section of the union in which larger and longer thirsts are produced, climatically and automatically, than in Arizona, and it is well understood that there is not a place in this broad land where the facilities for correcting and destroying thirsts are more perfect than in Milwaukee. Here comes in operation, and in a striking and beautiful manner, the law of affinity between opposites. Arizona, for reasons which are too obvious to require explanation, is constantly sending forth the tendrils of her affection toward Milwaukee, while Milwaukee, for reasons equally obvious, is constantly in sympathy with Arizona.

TO NAVIGATE ROCK IN A HOUSE-BOAT

Bert Van Houter is Preparing for Ideal Summer Comfort Near Home.

Bert Van Houter, the intrepid navigator who had several exciting experiences with a naphtha launch on the Rock river last summer, is having built by Capt. Buchholz a fine house-boat which will be launched in the early spring. The craft is thirty feet in length and has a beam measurement of 10 feet. A ten-horse power engine is to be installed and there will be three good-sized rooms in the pleasure boat. Mr. Van Houter is likely to set the fashion for others. Travelers stopping here have often remarked the absence of houseboats on such an ideal stream for them.

KICKERS' KOLUM

To the Public: For some time past the Gazette has placed this column at the disposal of the public to publish their communications of public interest. It is in no way a column for the airing of personal grievances against individuals or corporations. An illustration of this will be a communication that was handed in recently and not published, where at the writer became angry. The communication in question dwelt entirely on a personal matter between the janitor of a building and two individuals whom he claimed placed ashes in the roadway contrary to law and who attacked him when he remonstrated. It is safe to say, there are two sides to every question and the publication of such a communication would be merely the venting of a personal spite. This is not the purpose of this column. It is open to the public to air their views on public matters and each communication received must be accompanied by the writer's name and address. This will not be published unless requested. All matters presented for publication must be written on one side of the paper only and is subject to refusal if it is deemed of too personal a nature. GAZETTE PRINTING CO.

Sliding Question.

To the Editor: How about sprinkling ashes on slippery sidewalks? Is this contrary to the city ordinances governing such matters?

"SLIPPERY JIM."

To the Editor: I am not a kicker by nature, but should not the parents warn their small boys to keep off the sidewalks with their sleds? Of course the youngsters must slide somewhere and it is their right that they have some enjoyment, but is it not possible to avoid sending for the police to stop them when a word of caution at their homes would do just as well? Goodness knows the walks are slippery enough without having them made more so by the youngsters sliding down the side hills to the detriment and danger of pedestrians.

NOT A KICKER.

Where is the sidewalk inspector that he does not force people to keep their walks clean of snow and ice? Some one will have a bad fall yet and then heavy damages will be asked.

CLASH OVER STATEHOOD.

Hearing Before Committee Brings Out Much Ill Feeling.

Washington, Jan. 18.—For two hours the House committee on territories and the delegation of the Anti-Joint Statehood League of Arizona engaged in a sparring match, which resulted in a personal clash between Representative Powers of Maine and Delegate Smith of Arizona. R. A. Morrison of Prescott was addressing the committee and Mr. Smith objected frequently to questions concerning the inadequate taxation of mines and railways in Arizona and the proportion of Mexicans in Arizona and New Mexico. Mr. Powers resented the interruption. "I understand fully the sensitiveness of this delegation concerning these questions," he declared. "I know whom they represent and all about them." "I have heard enough of this and I denounce the charge as false," Mr. Smith retorted. "You may impugn the motives of the chairman, but when you impugn my motives I shall resist." Mr. Powers replied emphatically: "I shall ask all the questions I want to." Later Mr. Smith offered an apology, but the feeling was so intense and the hearing so unsatisfactory that the committee decided that all speakers shall be permitted to complete their arguments before they are subjected to questions.

RATE REGULATION.

Senator Elkins' Bill is Outlined for the Public.

Washington, Jan. 18.—Senator Elkins, chairman of the senate committee on interstate commerce, made public his bill for the regulation of railway rates, with the old statement that he knew it was unsatisfactory to the railroad companies and he did not know what the other side would think of it. He admitted that the measure might not be perfect, but added that it was the best he could do. The provisions of the bill, in brief, are as follows: "The membership of the interstate commerce commission is increased to nine. Whenever the commission finds evidence of unjust rates or discrimination, it shall have the power to begin a suit in equity in the circuit court to restrain the railroad. This action may be begun on the motion of the commission or on application by an interested person. Speedy action by the courts is arranged for, and upon the issuance of any injunction the carrier must put in force a reasonable rate. Should the substituted rate be unsatisfactory to the commission, the members of that body shall have the power to order a rate which they deem to be just. This order of the commission is to be effective within ten days and continue for one year. A fine of $1,000 each day is provided for disobedience. The only appeal is to the United States supreme court. Other sections provide for an examination of the books of the railroads; the employment of special agents to investigate suspected rebates; control of the icing of refrigerator cars; and the issuance of passes and regulating passenger rates. Common carriers are permitted to enter into agreements to establish or maintain rates, if first approved by the commission, and to select the connecting lines for forwarding shipments.

GLIMPSES OF HARPER

Remarkable Fortitude of Chicago University's President.

KEEN SUFFERER, BUT EVER CHEERY.

How He Followed in Bed the Moves of a Football Game While Racked With Terrible Pain—Incident of His Early Days When He Led a Band, His Methods of Working.

The late Dr. William Rainey Harper, who had been president of the University of Chicago since its inception in 1891, excelled in many things as a scholar, as a teacher, as a great educational organizer, as an authority on Hebrew and other Semitic languages—but in nothing was he more admirable than in the fortitude he displayed in the illness that resulted in his death, says the New York Times. During the many months in which he suffered terrible pain when he knew that his days were numbered, that all the physicians and surgeons could do was to prolong them for a little while, he remained ever cheerful and to the last minute possible carried on the duties of his position with all his usual keenness and vigor.

It has been an inspiring spectacle—that of this doomed man refusing to give in. Two months ago, when the cancer which killed him had grown to such a size that the abdominal region had to be kept numb in order to make it possible for Dr. Harper to endure the pain, he was sitting up in bed receiving the bulletins of the Chicago Northwestern football game and following the moves on a plan he had prepared. Like so many other men, who after becoming well known, he was a sickly child, but after his seventh birthday his health improved, and when he was ten years old he entered Muskingum college, near Granville, O., from which he received the degree of bachelor of arts at the early age of fourteen. He caused local scholars to gaze with wonder when he delivered his commencement oration in Hebrew.

In 1872 when members of the senior class of Dennison university, Granville, O., were preparing for their commencement events a member of the class, C. T. Thompson, a well-known lawyer of Minneapolis, was authorized to arrange for the services of a country band at Cambridge, not far from Granville, says the Minneapolis Journal. The band went to Granville, performed satisfactorily, and the leader, who had been a student at Muskingum college, a little institution not far from Granville, made a favorable impression upon both the students and the members of the faculty with whom he came in contact at Dennison. He also was pleased with the reception given him so much so that he decided to return there as a student. He proved a bright fellow and under the persuasion of the Dennison faculty decided to study theology and prepare for the ministry. Prior to that time he had no special aim in life; no particular ambition beyond that of leading the Cambridge band, but ambitions were awakened at Dennison which led to his becoming a notable scholar, particularly in the field of Greek and Hebrew literature.

A few years ago he came to Minneapolis to deliver several lectures in a course under the auspices of the Institute of Biblical Literature, an organization formed for the promotion of study of the Bible. While resting one afternoon in the study of the First Baptist church, where these lectures were delivered, this eminent scholar said to Mr. Thompson: "What was your college?" "Dennison university," was the reply. "What class?" "Seventy-three."

"Well, do you remember that your class engaged the Cambridge band for your commencement?" "I certainly do," said Mr. Thompson, "as I made the engagement myself." "Well, do you remember the leader of that band?" "Yes, I remember that the leader was a pleasant, agreeable fellow, who gave us our money's worth."

"Ah, thank you! I am rather glad to hear you say that," said the lecturer, "for I was the leader of that band." Mr. Thompson was not more surprised than the reader will be when he discovers that the leader of the band was Dr. W. R. Harper, the late president of the University of Chicago.

For fifteen years Dr. Harper slept no more than five hours a night. Midnight found him at his desk. At 5 o'clock he arose and went to work again. Vainly his wife urged him to take eight hours' rest, says the New York World.

"I am luxurious," he told her. "Nature needs only four hours sleep. I take five."

An intimate friend, speaking of the doctor's methods of working, said: "The story is told that Mrs. Harper came into his study one morning at daybreak and found him seated at his desk writing."

"Perhaps I had better go to bed," he observed as she came in. "It must be getting late," he added, as a sort of concession.

"It is half past 5 o'clock," said Mrs. Harper. Instead of going to bed the doctor took his bath, dressed, had his cup of coffee in his room and, taking up his memorandum book, began the details of the next day's work without a hint of sleep or rest."

A few days ago Dr. Harper said to Professor Small: "I am going before my work is finished. I do not know where I am going, but I hope my work will go on. I expect to continue work in the future state, for this is only a small part of the glorious whole."

GOOD COUNSEL.

The old proverb says: "In a multitude of counselors, there is wisdom." Just so.

Surely the multitude of Janesville people, who testify to the ability of Dr. Richards, to do painless dentistry, ought to be convincing that he is doing what he is talking about.

And when they one and all counsel you to try him for your dental work, it OUGHT to BEAR WEIGHT with you.

Don't it look reasonable that what he does for them, he can do for you? And if there is anything in the world that would please you, it is the thought of getting absolute immunity from pain in dental work.

But to prove it to your personal satisfaction Dr. Richards must be given the chance to do your dentistry.

Drop in and talk it over with him. He will tell you exactly what the bill will amount to, so you can plan your resources and know where you will come out.

HOW JEFFRIS IS NOW CONSIDERED

MILWAUKEE DAILY NEWS SAYS THAT HE IS MUCH FEARED.

ORDER OUT TO BEAT HIM

Senator La Follette, It Is Claimed,
Has Placed Himself to Return to Defeat Him.

That the announcement of the candidacy of Malcolm Jeffris of this city has caused serious consternation in the opposition ranks was well understood when his announcement was made. That it had almost caused a panic was not appreciated, but according to the Milwaukee Daily News this is a fact. So much demoralized is the Cooper contingent, according to the article in the Daily News that Senator La Follette has deemed it necessary to promise that he will return next summer and campaign in the first district against Jeffris. The article which is published under a Madison date line is as follows:

The Article.
Senator Robert M. La Follette will be needed to aid Congressman H. C. Cooper in the first congressional district fight. M. G. Jeffris of Janesville, who is now an announced candidate against Mr. Cooper, is making a hard fight in the district and is already perfecting a strong organization in support of his candidacy. Although the contest has been carried on up to strongly half-breed and stalwart lines other considerations will come into the fight. There is no doubt that the half-breed "machine" in the district will be strong for Mr. Cooper. Orders to this effect have already gone out, as Senator La Follette feels that the triumph of the republican nomination of so open an opponent to him as Malcolm Jeffris would be a staggering blow to his supremacy in the state. This selfish reason on the part of the senator is going to help Mr. Cooper considerably, if half-breed aid in the district will be of any avail to save the congressman at the primary election. Orders have gone forth to the half-breed workers in the district that everything possible must be done to arouse Cooper sentiment in their precincts and from the way the leaders of the half-breed organization in Racine county are working it can be seen that the senator practically considers Mr. Cooper's battle his fight.

At the conference which was held in Madison between Mr. La Follette and Postmaster-Elect Gittings of Racine and Old Inspector Mills on January 11th, the senator informed Messrs. Gittings and Mills that he would go into the first district and make speeches for Mr. Cooper. He said it was his intention during the summer months to stump this state thoroughly in support of Speaker Lenroot's gubernatorial candidacy, and that in this tour the first district would be given plenty of attention. Just how much La Follette support in the first district will avail cannot yet be said. In a way there is no district in the state where a fight carried on upon strictly factional lines might be of more injury to a candidate, both at the primaries and later at the polls, than in the first district. Although the half-breed organization is strong in Racine county, and carries with it some element of strength for battles in Kenosha, Green and Lafayette counties, the sentiment in Rock and Walworth counties is strongly stalwart. In those two counties the fact that any candidate is relying on half-breed support for a nomination will be a positive injury, and there is stalwart sentiment enough in the other counties, even in Racine, to make a factional fight interesting. For this reason Mr. Jeffris may not be the sufferer because of the open support which is to be given Mr. Cooper by the senator.

It is known that Mr. Cooper is worried more over the contest which he has before him this time than he has ever been before in his congressional career. Two years ago it was within the power of the stalwarts to have defeated Mr. Cooper for re-nomination in the convention, had they desired to do so. Thus the congressman has had a well-earned view of the stalwart strength in his district, and is aware that the fight ahead of him will be a fierce one. The tariff question is going to cut considerable figure in this district, and Mr. Jeffris is making all the capital he can among the tobacco growers over the open declaration of Mr. Cooper in favor of a reduction of the Philippine schedules on tobacco. Just how much effect this issue will have no one can say. Although it may help some in the tobacco-growing district when it comes to the polls, the statements that Mr. Jeffris has made on the tariff question will be likely to aid any democratic candidate who runs in the district, for the reason that outside of the immediate tobacco-growing counties of the district the general feeling is without doubt, strongly for a tariff revision.

As regards the post-office fight the lines which the congressional contest has assumed in this district does not leave much hope for any stalwart candidate for any office in the district, while the endorsement of Congressman Cooper's necessary, and several federal plums will probably fall to half-breeds.

DON'T KEEP ABREAST WITH THE NEW LAWS

Many Bills Submitted by Officers to County Board Have to Be Rejected on That Account.

During the present session of the county board there has been frequent evidence that officers in this and neighboring counties are not keeping abreast of the times as regards the new laws passed by the legislature. District Attorney Newhouse has found it necessary to instruct the committees to reject numerous bills because the statutes had not been complied with. When the Beloit man, Constant Winters, fell out of a window at Johnsons Creek and it became evident that he had no private resources to pay for his care, it devolved on the physician in charge and the man who furnished him board and lodging to notify the county clerk of Jefferson county within ten days, and within ten days after that date it was the duty of the last-named official to notify the clerk of Rock county. This was not done and Dr. R. L. Smith's claim of $120 for services and J. E. Daily's $72 claim for board have no legal status, even though Poor Commissioner Siegmund made a verbal promise that Rock county would settle for the services. Inasmuch as the officers had no right to give this word when the forms had not been complied with, he is the only person that can be held liable. The matter will probably be settled, however, because the services were performed and the county, as a matter of right and wrong, ought to pay for them.

Fees for Slaughtering Cattle.
Justice Helmbold of Oxfordville sent in a bill which included three items arising out of the slaughter of some condemned cattle. One was for a lively rig for the appraisers, another for a fee for the health officer who disinfected the premises after the cows were slain, and the third for remunerating the man who buried the carcasses. The district attorney found no legal authority for charging the county with these items and the attorney general concurred in the opinion when his ruling was called for. The owner of the cattle will have to pay these expenses.

Doctors as Mere Witnesses.
Bills for the expenses of some coroner's inquests conducted in Beloit coming from the justices in that city, allowed certain physicians $1.08 regular witness fees while the physicians in question submitted bills for $20 and $25 for post-mortem examinations. These were authorized by the justices, but not included in their returns. The county pays $15 for this sort of work and both bills will have to be cut down to that amount when the justices shall have amended their returns to provide for these fees. The returns of justices must cover all officers' fees; but the latter must also submit their sworn affidavits that the services were performed and state the sums legally due them, and there must be no discrepancies between these bills and affidavits and the justices' returns.

COMMITTEE 7
IS CENSURED

But County Board Exonerates Same
of All Charges of Dishonesty or Graft.

After a discussion of more than an hour the County Board of Supervisors this afternoon formally expressed their trust in the honesty of the building committee and its members but censured the same for the manner in which they conducted their business in letting the bids for furnishing the new addition to the courthouse with steel filing cases.

The resolution completely exonerated the committee of all charges brought against them moved by Supervisor Ransom was presented. Immediately Supervisor Gettle offered an amendment. The latter was discussed by its mover, Supervisor Smith and others and finally adopted by a vote of 23 to 18. The committee as a whole reported to the board and the amendment of Supervisor Gettle was voted upon. There were 24 ayes and 13 noes.

The amendment in substance was: That the Board acting as a committee of the whole in the matter of the investigation of the letting of the contract after a full and free hearing, accorded the committee and the chief complainant and all others interested find: That without any violation of the law that the Art Metal company was allowed to withdraw its original bid and submit one lower. That the reason for the change as given in the statement of the company was merely a subterfuge and that the real reason was for the withdrawal and substitution of bids. That the Library Bureau has equally as good standing as the Art Metal company. That the Art Metal company grossly overcharged the county in furnishing the Register of Deeds' office with shelving. That the committee discouraged bids. The amendment closes in the following words: "We find further: That said committee before and at the opening of the said bids so conducted their business as to bring possible prejudice to the best interests of Rock county in discouraging competition in awarding such contract. That said committee nor either of its members in anyway profited by their action and this board has full and absolute faith in the honesty of the building committee."

HAUNTED HOUSE IS SOLD UNDER HAMMER

Beloit's Mysterious Building Purchased by John P. Neill of Waunakee Today for $3,900.

To satisfy a mortgage held by the Merchants & Mechanics' bank of Janesville the old Preston house property located on Sixth street, in Beloit, was this morning purchased at sheriff's sale by John P. Neill of Waunakee, Dane county, Wisconsin. The consideration was $3,900. The house was built before the Civil War by Dr. Sanderson, a southerner, who, tradition says, was a counterfeiter. It contains twenty-four rooms, a basement and wine cellar. It is also said to have been equipped with trap doors, secret passages, etc., which lends color to the counterfeiter tradition. Dr. Sanderson left there at the opening of the war and soon after word came that he was shot and killed in St. Louis. He had a family but all trace of it has been lost. The house had the reputation of being haunted, but during the occupancy of the late O. B. Carpenter, F. L. Preston and others, no one seems to have seen the ghost walk. Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Everett are the present occupants.

ROCKFORDITE SLEPT IN CHILL ALLEYWAY

William Olson Was Aroused in Half-Frozen Condition by Passer-By Last Night—Claimed a Hold Up.

William Olson, a Scandinavian about twenty years of age, hailing from Rockford, partook too freely of the cheering cup last evening and lying down in an alley near the Baptist church was soon wrapped in sweet repose. He was aroused in a half-frozen condition some hours later and hatless and shivering made his way to the corner of Milwaukee and Franklin streets where he stood for some time, as if waiting for an interurban car. Alderman Connell happening to pass about eleven o'clock and learning of the man's plight, piloted him to a place where he could get warm and then informed Officer Morrissey of his whereabouts. A half hour after he had reached the lockup it occurred to Olson that he had been held up by two footpads armed with revolvers near the billboards on South Jackson street and relieved of his hat, watch, and $25 in cash. He could even remember looking into the cold muzzle of one of the firearms. The officers questioned him closely and were convinced that the hold-up was either a dream that had seemed true or the fanciful creation of a partially refrigerated imagination required to furnish a quick "excuse" after being thawed out. Mr. Olson went back to Rockford this morning. A young man believed to be half-witted and harboring the single idea that "he had been sawing wood" has found shelter in the lockup for the past two evenings. He claims that his name is Yon-Yonson and his home Clinton.

The Adventurers

By H. B. MARRIOTT WATSON

COPYRIGHT, 1898, BY HARPER & BROTHERS

"Did they inform you of my disappearance?" I asked.

Jones hesitated. "No, sir," he said at last.

"I should think not," I replied.

A murmur of approbation came from the vicar. Jones looked at me, but he had the proper Welsh obstinacy and still lingered. The vicar turned on him.

"Come, Jones," he said, "I think apologies are due from you to both these gentlemen, and I trust you see how preposterous your theories are."

"I beg your pardon, sir, for intruding," said Jones to me, but he did not look at Sercombe, and he made him no apology.

"He retired clumsily," and Sercombe burst out laughing and throwing his hat on the table, said, "Take a seat, Mr. Morgan," he said. "Let us all have a glass of wine after this trying ordeal. Greatorex, you'll join us?"

"I declined," but the parson accepted and sat down to an amiable gossip. Blanche from his uncle, who had been in the vicar's school, I fancy, he lingered affectionately on a friend who had been his presumptive to a baronetcy, and was undoubtedly bent upon a further revelation of his connections with the aristocracy when Sercombe, by cunning devices, lured his tongue to another topic, in which both of us were interested.

"It appeared that there was a great curiosity spreading as to the castle and the events of the past weeks. Some went so far as to speak knowingly of a 'mystery,' but as the little vicar said, 'the lower classes are fond of talking about their superiors and imputing to them abominable crimes.' He sipped his wine and confided in us, getting back at last through all Sercombe's nets to his respectable connections. Finally he concluded in a pleasant mixture of snobbery and religion and prepared to take his leave. I got up simultaneously.

"I will accompany you, Mr. Morgan," I said. "I will walk as far as the castle, if that is your way."

Sercombe started and then a broad grin grew on his face.

"I congratulate you on your quickness of wit," he whispered as I passed him.

It was a tiny triumph, but I enjoyed it all the more because I had been for so long a mere tool in their hands. I took the parson's arm and walked out into the roadway. Sercombe and Hood stood in conference before the door when I looked back, and I thought I perceived in the distance a grim and shallow smile flash over the latter's face.

CHAPTER XVII.

I PARTED from the vicar at the gates of the castle and hurried through the park in a lively state of anxiety. I had not yet conceived for myself what had happened in the interval of my absence. Sercombe to be sure, had thrown out hints, but I knew better than to put any faith in him. Still it was certain that anything might have happened, and we might even now be in possession of the treasure. But what gave me my first blow was the sight of the drawbridge, peacefully spanning the waters of the moat, and the spikes of the portcullis protruding just below the archway. These appearances seemed to point in one direction and to acquaint me that the game was up.

Inside I met Mrs. Main, who started in alarm and pursued me with her excited inquiries, so that it was very plain whence the news of my disappearance had reached the police. She informed me that Mr. Sheppard and Mr. Montgomery were both within and seated, in fact, at lunch. In the dining room, therefore, I sought them and broke in upon them. I will not say with what delight I was welcomed, embraced affectionately by Sheppard and sturdily shaken by Montgomery's great fist. They had been anxious, and yet not alarmed, by my absence. Sheppard's wits were always quick, and said he:

"I knew that it was not worth their while to slaughter you, Ned, but what other devilment they might be up to I could not guess. On the whole, we decided finally in favor of what actually occurred." And then, "So you were taken?" he asked. "But how?"

"Give me food and wine and I will give you my story," I replied, sitting down to the table.

Sheppard laid his hand on my shoulder. "No," said he, "not yet. There is something further afoot." And, looking at him, I perceived a great gravity on his features. He showed a woman and troubled face, now that the excitement of my return was over.

"What is the matter?" I asked. "Is the treasure?"

"That is it," he said. "I want that key. We tried the door to vain. We could not break it down. It is adamant. God knows, it was not for want of trying."

"I fear the key is no use to us now," I said quickly.

He regarded me seriously and with a pale face.

"You must forget, Ned," he said gently, "what you left there."

Montgomery's face had fallen, and he sat echoing Sheppard's consternation. Suddenly a light dawned on me. It was flood they had in mind.

"Hood's not there," I said. Sheppard stared at me.

"Not a bit of it," I went on. "He's plump and alive as ever, and a worse rascal."

"But how—how—why?" exclaimed Montgomery. "I thought the poor devil was dead and rotten by now. We tried all we could."

"Oh, I see I must hasten on to my story without more ado," I said, and accordingly began at once upon my narrative. Chagrin grew upon their faces as I proceeded, and I was interrupted only by the expressions of astonishment and anger which the various episodes of my adventure evoked from both. When it was over, Sheppard rose.

"With your leave, Ned," said he, "I will go down to the keep forthwith. And he left the room, with Montgomery at his heels. I, too, followed. I was eager to know the worst without unnecessary delay.

My surmises were quite correct. The dungeon rested as it had done when I saw it last and apparently had suffered no trespass. The chests stood in the corners as before, but they were bare of every piece of gold, silver, or jewel. The thieves had made a clean job of their depredation. We stared at one another in dismay and retreated dismally to the upper regions of the house.

"Well, there's an end," said Montgomery, with a sigh, and I fancy we were all of the same opinion in that early blast of despair.

"The treasure was gone, and he must be a sharp fellow, indeed, who could discover its hiding place throughout the district of the Gwent, or maybe within the borders of the kingdom," Sheppard was the first to show us the way out of our deadly apathy.

"I am not going to see it stop here," Ned, he said, with determination, "and that's the truth." That treasure must be somewhere, and we've got to find it.

"I say, ditto to that," cried Montgomery stalwartly, heaving a sigh of resolution.

"If we could narrow the field," I said. "Pshaw," said Sheppard. "They can't have got it far. How many days is it? Why, they can't have got the money out all at once, otherwise they would not have kept you locked up. I'll go bail that the last was fetched out only last night, if as early as that. And, if so, the treasure is not very far from the castle."

"Some of it may be in London," I answered moodily.

"Well, mind you, I don't admit it. But, say it is so, there must be something still about the Gwent, and we've got to run it down. I think from what you say, you surprised them by your fitting with the vicar. It is evident that they wished to keep you a little longer, no doubt until they had disposed of the treasure under our noses."

"You are right, I believe," I replied. "Why did they want to keep me? Not because they had not the treasure, but to prevent an alarm. And yet the motive was not strong enough that they dared risk a misunderstanding with Morgan. Yes, you've hit it, Sheppard. But the Gwent is wide enough, heaven knows."

"Come, we have reached one point," said Sheppard. "Perhaps we can do more on reflection. Don't let us give it up. Is this treasure likely to be anywhere about the inn?"

"There is the barn," said I, "and the stable lofts, and there are the cellars."

"Oh, Ned, there is everywhere," groaned Sheppard. "We might watch it if they've got it away," suggested Montgomery, with some hesitation. It was not often that he intervened in our counsels, but his intervention was now to the point.

"Good!" said Sheppard, smacking him on the shoulder.

"Watch is the word. We've hitherto kept our watches in the battlements. We must now merely transfer them to where the treasure has gone."

"Where is that?" I asked.

"Let us say the Woodman," replied Sheppard, smiling.

"A very much more dangerous duty," I said slowly.

"Dangerous? We thrive on danger," said Sheppard gayly. "Anyhow, let us break up the conference and take an airing. There's nothing to keep us now in the castle, and hence we are in no need of drawbridges. It is we who are the assailants."

"That reminds me," I put in. "I found the drawbridge down when I came in just now."

Sheppard winked. "My dear boy, if you had to answer all the awkward questions I have had to during the last three days, you would have let down the drawbridge in despair."

"Jones?" I queried.

"Jones is the majesty of the law, and an infernally suspicious law it is."

It was very early in the afternoon, and there might be time to put a point upon our resolutions. This thought ran in our heads as, all three, we turned down the road that led to the Woodman.

Sercombe was sunning himself before the door of the inn, seated in a comfortable chair beneath the swinging sign. As we came abreast of him he looked up and greeted us.

"Good day, gentlemen," he said cheerfully. "I'm glad to see you back, Mr. Greatorex. We heard that you had disappeared, and were beginning to be anxious about you."

"The amazing impudence of the man took away my breath, but I managed to recover and say:

"Yes, I have been taking a little holiday; private business, you know, captain."

"Ah," said he, shaking his head. "I wish I had the time. But I find holidays must look after themselves. I've too much on hand."

"I sympathize with you, Captain Sercombe," said Sheppard. "For myself, I never could abide business. But I think I understand to what you refer—a bad business, a very bad business."

Sercombe studied him attentively. "You seem to know a great deal, my dear sir," he replied.

"I know, and you know that I know, that you have the heaviest team to drive uphill that ever man undertook," said Sheppard, watching him.

"Maybe," said the captain after a pause. "Life's not all beer and skittles, gentlemen. Perhaps you're right. I don't say you're wrong. But the fact is that I—well, it's a pity we couldn't have fixed an arrangement together earlier."

He spoke so freely that I inferred he was not any longer in the fear of Hood, which meant for us that Hood was absent.

Was he absent, looking after the treasure? Upon consideration I decided that this was unlikely, otherwise Sercombe would not be resting so comfortably in his chair. The two scoundrels dared not trust one another. In that case, the odds were that the treasure lay in the Woodman, and here was Sercombe, and as likely as not a Greek of two, keeping guard upon it.

This was all I wanted to know, and, having gained this information, I deemed it time to retire. You will think me rash in my conjectures, but you must conceive that in the game we were playing it was necessary to come to a conclusion quickly, and I had learned to come to a conclusion on the slightest evidence. Anyhow, I gave the signal for retreat, and back we went to the castle by a circuitous route, so as to avoid any suspicions on the part of the captain.

"Night was the occasion I wanted, and it was for the fall of dark that we waited with great impatience. Sheppard agreed with me that the treasure lay in the inn and most probably in the cellars. The two thieves would secure it against one another. I admit that I entertained little hope of cutting out the treasure under the noses of the enemy. On the other hand, it would be difficult to say what I really did anticipate or aim at in this nocturnal expedition. I think we all felt that we could not compose our minds to rest and an imperturbable indifference. We must be upon our legs and bustling about some business, even though it should prove the veriest moonshine; and I believe, too, that a notion was current among us that we might by some felicitous chance or by some heroic effort accomplish something under the cover of darkness, if we might not actually wrest from its abominable holders the gold and jewels of the treasure. At 10 o'clock we three were gathered within the shelter of the deep thicket before the Woodman. Montgomery had taken up his position there by light, but reported that there had been no movement in the inn.

Within our cogen of vantage we rested, peeping through the interstices of the foliage upon the Woodman. The windows gleamed with light, but beyond that there was no mark of life. Half an hour went by in this way, and then a sound of voices rose from the inn, and presently there emerged from the doorway two men, who stood in conversation for a few minutes before the house. It was too dark to make them out distinctly, but one I set down as Hood. After a time they separated, Hood, as I supposed him to be, returning into the inn and his companion walking down the road away from us. If we were to effect anything this man must be followed, and I whispered as much to the others, alerting them to take the duty on myself. Slipping through the copse, therefore, I struck downward through the fringe of wood that bordered the road. My progress was naturally slower than that of the man I was tracking, and soon I was surprised to lose the sound of his feet. But a moment's reflection convinced me that he had turned off the roadway and was proceeding, like myself, through the forest. This conviction became certainty a little later, when, pausing to resolve upon my direction, I heard the noise of breaking sticks ahead of me and a brushing among the foliage. Guided by these sounds, I shifted my path and went forward. I imagine now that the man must have heard me just as I had heard he was being followed. At the time I thought myself undiscovered, for I moved with slight noise. Yet what happened was this: I suddenly ceased once more to get tidings of him, I paused and waited, but the valley (for we were now winding into the bottom) was stagnant with silence, save for the purring stream in the distance. Slowly and cautiously I pushed on and came out into a more open space, where I stood silent, waiting again. I must have remained there still and attentive to all the tiny raptures of the nocturnal quietude, for more than half an hour. But I heard nothing of my man, and so in some disgust I resolved to abandon the pursuit. Retracing my steps, I climbed up to the road and rejoined my companions in the thicket. I found Sheppard in what for him was a bad temper.

"Our sport is being spoiled," he said impatiently, and to my questions added, "Jones."

The chests were bare of treasure.

New York Life Incurs Heavy Bills for Entertaining the Hustlers.

FINE CANDIES FOR THE WOMEN

Wives of the Men Who Write Policies Are Fed on the Most Costly Sweets to be Had in New York City Stores.

New York, Jan. 18.—Candy from an expensive New York shop made glad the wives of the Nylies at the annual convention of that organization at the Lakewood hotel in Lakewood, N. J., Wednesday. The lavish expenditure by the New York Life insurance company in entertaining its chosen band of agents did not stop.

In the early morning carriages, at an expenditure of $125, took the wives of the Nylies out sightseeing. A sextet of six parodies on popular songs for the entertainment of the convention at $100 a day was a feature, and with a hotel bill of about $1,500 a day and a special train to take the fortunate men to Lakewood and back from this city, at $2,000, the expedition will cost the New York Life a big lot of money.

Proxies for Policy Holders. The main feature of the day's session was the circulation among the Nylies of copies of a new proxy to be passed out to policy holders. Oscar S. Straus, John Chaffin, and Clarence H. McKay are named in the proxy as attorneys to vote for the policy holders. The arrival of Secretary John C. McCall at night was followed by a request to all Nylie men to have the new proxy thoroughly circulated in their home districts.

For the company, Secretary McCall pledged the organization hereafter would be extremely careful of investments and would keep down expenses. It was stated that $5,000 has been saved in a few weeks by keeping down the accounts with newspapers for advertising.

George W. Perkins was present in the afternoon to explain to the Nylies how his personal account got mixed up with the Nylie bank account. His explanation was satisfactory to the agents and they rose and cheered him for three minutes.

Says Perkins is All Right. After Mr. Perkins got through one of the officers of the Nylie said:

"There is nothing to fear, even if Mr. Perkins' money and Nylie money did get mixed up, which it didn't. I think it would be a right good thing for Nylie if Nylie's money could get mixed up with Mr. Perkins' money." Secretary John C. McCall made an address to the agents in the evening. He told them to forget the troubles of 1905 and to join hands and pull together for increased business during the present year.

National Bowling Tourney

Occurs In Louisville, Opening March 27. Low Railroad Rates Secured and Largest Attendance on Record Expected.

The national bowling tournament will be held in March in Louisville. Clubs throughout the country are now holding tryouts to determine who will go as representatives. This annual tournament is the one big bowling fest of the year, and candidates for the contesting teams are increasing in number each year.

Latest reports from Louisville are more than encouraging over the progress being made in preparations for the tournament. Recently a one fare rate for round trip tickets was secured from the Central Passenger association from all points in its jurisdiction, the first time in the history of the bowling game that such a low rate has been secured and one that ought to help increase the size of the tournament to record breaking proportions.

This increase has been taken care of by the officials, who have extended the tournament so that ten days instead of one week will be devoted to the tournament. This, however, will work no hardship on the bowlers, as the longest time any of them need to stay in Louisville will be three days. A cash prize list of $20,000 seems to be assured already, and the wisdom of the officials in tying up the money so that it will be held in trust for the prizes is more than shown by the prospect of such an enormous prize fund.

Philadelphia has come out for the 1907 meet. Several different committees have been appointed, and a delegation of at least ten teams seems assured from the Quaker City. It is understood that Detroit and St. Louis will also be bidders. Philadelphia has secured options on three halls in which to hold the tournament, the First and Second regiment armories and the Exposition building.

The report recently that challenges by the New York bowlers issued to Chicagoans would not be thought seriously of until some cash forfeits were deposited has resulted in Jimmy Smith depositing two forfeits of $50 each. One is for a match between himself and any other one man in the country for from $500 to $500 a side, while the other guarantees a match between himself and Johnny Voorhees against any other two men. The matches are to be played in Louisville on either the national tournament alleys or some other neutral drives in that city right after the national tournament opening March 27. Doubtless the New York men will cover the forfeit.

Advices received from New York recently indicate that Greater New York will assume for the first time in bowling history its rightful prominence in the affairs of the national congress and tournament. This was brought about by the adoption by New York of a resolution to join the congress before the national tournament at a meeting held recently. The action means that New York will send a thoroughly representative number of teams to Kentucky to compete in the coming sixth national tournament.

But one proviso has been made by the New Yorkers, and that is that an effort shall be made by their delegates to the Louisville congress to secure a ruling in which New York shall be given supreme jurisdiction over its own internal affairs, and while they ask for something more powers than those enjoyed by the present city associations which are members of the national body, yet the differences are small, and a way will probably be found to meet their wishes.

New Yorkers have been the disturbing factor in the national congress since 1901, and while they have had many arguments on their side in favor of their position, yet their latest action is one that redounds not alone to their own credit, but is a testimonial to the efforts of the western men who have labored for years to span the breach between the factions.

Basket Ball.

Indoor Sport Has Many Valuable Features as an Exercise.

Basket ball is a close rival of bowling for popularity as an indoor winter sport. The number of basket ball players in America now counts up into the thousands, and in spite of detrimental work by the rules committee the game has never halted in healthy development.

Professionalism has proved a bane in New Jersey, New York and Pennsylvania, but in other states the sport has been kept comparatively clean. Its present flourishing condition is due solely to the watchfulness and interest of the Amateur Athletic union.

It is now ten years or more since the invention of basket ball, and the game has survived its pioneer days, each year rendering its position more secure. The best physical trainers agree that basket ball offers one of the most effective methods of training for summer sports, where ordinary calisthenics and gymnasium work become monotonous and some form of severe exercise is necessary to keep the athlete in fit condition.

The play has had a tendency to grow rough among the best eastern players during the last few years, and there has been a general demand among spectators and players for more stringent rules that would prevent rough play.

In basket ball the field is so small and the play is so fast, that it is difficult to prevent roughness, but the referees are almost unanimous in their effort to penalize most severely the first offenders in this respect. Free throws for fouls are given the opponents for foul tackling, and players are disqualified for deliberate fouls and rough play.

The rules furnish plenty of opportunity for clever play without resort to physical contact, and the most brilliant players are those who dodge the opponents and evade their blocking by trickery rather than those who push the opponents out of the way and force the ball past them.

Marcus Hurley, one of the stars of last season's champion eastern college team, is one of the fastest bicycle riders in the country, and the fact that he finds basket ball the best form of winter training is a high recommendation for the game.

Basket ball is undoubtedly one of the most strenuous of all games. When played in a cage, with no out of bounds rules, it is far more exhausting than football.

The development of team work is essential. Under the present rules passing the ball instead of "dribbling" it is probably the most important feature.

A New Heavyweight Wrestler.
Frank Gotch, who won the American wrestling championship from Tom Jenkins in Cleveland, ran against a taffer in the same city recently. Gotch was giving exhibitions at the Empire theater when Lester Schulte, a nineteen-year-old lad, climbed to the stage, and there were ten minutes and three seconds of very lively work, before Gotch could pin him to the mat.

The youngster weighed 190 pounds and is in training with heavy weight championship aspirations. After the bout Gotch predicted that with two years of work the lad should be in shape to go after the best of the wrestlers. He has size and youth in his favor and at the worst is a mighty good find right now.

College Athletic Prospects

Strong Track Teams In the Middle West--Chicago's Candidates. Wisconsin's Outlook Is of the Brightest Sort. Kraenzlein's Big Squad.

The winter track season at the various colleges in the middle west has begun with record breaking activity. The Universities of Chicago, Wisconsin, Illinois and Michigan, etc., have formidable squads of men in training, and each hopes to develop the team that will win the conference meet in the spring.

Chicago has many good men, including Eckersall, the phenomenal football player, who looms up as a possible sprinting champion; Hogenson, another good man in the dashes; Croman, a strong quarter miler; Captain Parry, in weight events; and Wilkins, in the pole vault.

According to Coach Kraenzlein, track prospects at the University of Wisconsin were never brighter than at present. Since the cold weather put a stop to the outdoor work the men have done their training on the gymnasium, and, contrary to expectations, the work has been more satisfactory than when the men were outside.

Eighty men are now in training, including some of the most promising material that Wisconsin has seen for years. Coach Kraenzlein has obtained a good line on the candidates, and soon the weeding out process will reduce this squad to thirty.

In the running classes especially does Wisconsin seem strong. Of the old men Captain Waller is again out for the 220. He is running in splendid form, and while no official time is given out, it is said that he has covered the distance twice in record time. Waller will also enter the 100 yard dash and will run the last lap of the relay races.

Competing with Waller in the dashes are Riddout, Hasbrook, Gröbe and Vreeland, the two first named in the quarter mile and the other two in the 100 yard sprint. Meyer is in condition for the half mile, while Hean and Cooper will run the mile and two mile races.

Among the new men Parsons, the crack sprinter of the University of California, who entered Wisconsin last year, is the center of interest. While at California he made a record of 9.45 seconds in the 100 yard dash and even now can grid out the 220 in 22 seconds flat, a fifth of a second more than the varsity record. Davis, a freshman from Carroll college, whom Coach Stagg made strenuous efforts to obtain for Chicago, is a ten second man, and Larson, who entered this fall as a sophomore from Harvard, is in the same class. Stroud, Gridler, Rice and Waller complete the list of short distance runners. Shorey, who did good work on the Oshkosh high school team two years ago, is the only new distance man on the squad.

In the field events the new men are showing up in good form. Floate of Armour institute is believed to be the find of the year in the high jump. His form can be improved, but he can clear the bar easily at 5 feet 5 inches. Leslie, a junior, and Cooresen, who won the high jump in the state interscholastic meet two years ago, can be developed into varsity men of high caliber.

Springer, who tied for first place in the state meet last spring, and McMillan, his team mate, are practicing daily. Springer is said to have a record of 10 feet 11 inches. With Quarles and Huetner again on the team it seems that the jumps and pole vault will be well taken care of.

In the weights Wisconsin does not show up so strong. Johnson, a new man, won several medals at the Portland exposition. Messmer and Sundry are the only other aspirants in this department.

EACH MAN HIS OWN HORSE

The German Soldier Carries a Load Which Should Be Lightened.

The German Tommy Atkins is well known to be a hardy soldier, and this to a great extent is due to the severity of his training. When on the march he is loaded like a beast of burden, and the German war office is at present considering how best they may lighten this load.

They are beginning with the heavy calfskin knapsack, for which another of light waterproof canvas is to be substituted.

Of the German infantry recruit it is said that he carries his house on his back. Besides the knapsack itself and his rifle equipment and clothing, he carries cooking utensils, parts of a tent, an overcoat, 30 cartridges, a linen suit, a quantity of underwear, two pair of boots, boot brushes and blacking, metal tools, a prayer book and a small box for knickknacks.

"Shoddy."

It is old wool redressed by scientific and clean methods. It is a component of most of the woolen garments of today. The world does not grow enough wool to enable us to have a constant supply of new woolen garments, except with the aid of shoddy. It is shoddy that has enabled the workman to buy a new suit of clothes at the price of a week's wage. In the olden days an all-woolen garment was so expensive that it had to last its owner many years, unless he were a wealthy man. It is better hygiene for a man to buy two new shoddy suits a year than to buy an all-wool garment which must last him two years. Most of the clothes we wear, in fact, contain an element of shoddy, and so far from being the worse for it, are the better.—Magazine of Commerce.

Diamonds Explode.

A curious fact regarding diamonds is that it is not uncommon for the crystals to explode as soon as they are brought up from the mine. Sometimes they have burst in the pockets or the warm hands of miners, due to the effect of increased temperature. Large stones are more likely to do this than small ones. Valuable stones have been destroyed in this way. By way of safeguard, some dealers imbued large diamonds in a raw potato for safe transport from South Africa.

"Logical Consequences are the scare-crows of some—but the beacons of wise men."—HUXLEY.

DID A "LOGICAL CONSEQUENCE" EVER RISE UP AND HIT YOU?

A business enterprise may weather almost any kind of a storm if its executive head has a proper respect for "Logical Consequences"—if he does not imagine that they can be evaded as easily as City ordinances. But—it's all over with any business enterprise whose director appears regularly as a

LOSING DEFENDANT IN THE COURT OF CAUSE AND EFFECT

The merchant knows that, as to publicity, the size, nature and quality of a store-ad. has a direct, positive and inevitable effect on the volume of business done; that this is true on every day of the week—that a dull business day is a logical consequence of inadequate advertising—that poor business is not a misfortune, but merely a foreseeable result of a weak publicity programme.

Thus the laws of cause and effect are beneficent or baleful, according to whether we plan in consonance with them or try to flout them.
